The Butler Center offers photographic reproductions of research materials as long as:

1. These reproductions do not violate Title 17 of the U.S. copyright law that governs the making of reproductions of copyrighted materials.
2. Donor agreements do not restrict photographic reproduction.
3. These reproductions can be produced without damage or risk of damage to the original materials.

Copyright Concerns

Clearance of copyright is always the responsibility of the person wishing to publish or display material. Patrons are responsible for securing permission to reproduce materials from the Butler Center and for complying with copyright laws. Where the Butler Center is not the copyright holder, proof in writing of permission from the copyright holder must be presented before orders can be processed.

In all cases, written permission to publish or display reproductions of the Butler Center materials must be secured from the Center as owner of the physical property prior to the use of the materials. Patrons must fill out a Permission to Publish Request form. All images that are published or displayed must include the Center’s credit line alongside the image. A complimentary copy of the final publication in any medium using reproductions of Butler Center materials must be donated to the Center.

I have read and agree to comply with the Butler Center’s photographic policies outlined above and will not reproduce or use images in any other way than stated.
